The minister, Vuk Jeremic, has been removed from his post but Prime Minister Ivica Dacic said he could not resign. The BBC's Mark Lowen in Belgrade says the prime minister, who is himself a Serb, faces a political storm if he cannot get his deputy to quit. The protest was organised by nationalists in Belgrade. Mr Dacic said the deputy minister was a "symbol" of "national interests of Serbia". But Mr Jeremic told local media he would not resign and accused the prime minister of trying to "shut off" all sides of the debate over Nato. Mr Jeremic's resignation - announced at a news conference late on Thursday - appears to have surprised people in the country, which is on the edge of the EU. The BBC's Mark Lowen in Belgrade says the resignation of the prime minister's deputy may be seen as a signal to the international community that Serbia is willing to hold talks with the EU over EU entry. The Nato summit is taking place
